Building our Company

Steve Houff believes in the power of partnerships and that belief drives his approach to everything he does, from leading Forrester Construction to his commitments in the community. Since starting as a Project Manager at Forrester in 1999, his focus has been on building relationships with clients, subcontractors, and his team. Steve is a passionate advocate for partnering with our clients' missions and has countless repeat clients because of that willingness to engage. His experience managing highly complex projects in a wide range of markets and with a diversity of delivery methods has resulted in a portfolio of work that has impacted lives throughout the DC region. Steve takes particular pride in the schools he has built, including both public, private, and public charter schools. At E.L. Haynes, Steve demonstrated his commitment to the school's focus by creating a scholarship that provides support for graduates seeking careers in STEM that continues throughout their four years of college.

Steve has a degree in Civil Engineering from the University of Maryland, where he now sits on the Board of Visitors for the Department of Civil and Environmental Engineering. He is a dedicated Terp sports fan and can be found in the stands at Xfinity Center cheering on the team each basketball season. Steve has long been engaged in the local community, both in AEC-related organizations such as the DC Preservation League and the USGBC and through his work as a Trustee of the Bethany United Methodist Church. He was named Forrester's President and CEO in 2016.

Steve has been to eight countries!
